How does a School-based Traineeship work?

A school-based traineeship allows students to combine senior schooling with paid employment and nationally recognised training. Typically, students attend school, work and training throughout the week according to an agreed schedule developed between the student, employer, school and Registered Training Organisation (RTO).

This flexible pathway enables students to gain practical workplace experience while developing industry-specific skills and working towards a vocational qualification. Students receive support throughout their traineeship and have the opportunity to apply their learning in a real workplace environment.

How it works:

- Time is allocated throughout the school week for students to attend work and training
- Students are employed and paid by their employer
- Eligible school-based traineeships may attract Queensland Government funding, subject to current funding arrangements and eligibility criteria
- Eligible employers may have access to government incentives or support programs, subject to program requirements
- Students are generally required to complete a minimum of 375 hours (50 days) of paid employment, subject to current Queensland Government requirements.
- Students participate in regular training and assessment activities
- Training is delivered in a supportive learning environment
- Training and assessment are competency-based
- Students complete practical and theory-based assessment activities throughout their qualification
- Students develop valuable workplace skills while working towards a nationally recognised qualification

What's in it for you?

- Earn while you learn
- Gain real workplace experience
- Develop practical skills for the workplace
- Work towards a nationally recognised qualification
- Build confidence and employability skills
- Explore future career opportunities
- Get a head start on your career
